AMERICAN IN PARIS

PARIS (WNS) — Marilyn de Gaillande, a California girl married to a Frenchman, has created a new profession to make life easier for American tourists and French restaurateurs. "I teach local chefs how to make dishes that will not upset American diners," she said. Mme. De Gaillande, 29, was thrust into her new business while dining at a Paris restaurant when an American woman at the next table threatened to call the police because there were "mouse droppings" on her salad. Actually the black spots on the lettuce were caviar. Mme. De Gaillande said, "I restored peace."
